

A SPANISH PERFIN

by Jack Brandt

From time to time one comes across a pair of stamps, one with a perfin, and the other without. This is usually caused by carelessness on the part of the one doing the perforating. Below are depicted a pair from Spain where the correct number of perforations were made, but they are both on the one stamp, with none on the other. This perfin is very common and normally, when looking through Spanish perfins, one finds too many of them. However, with the possibility of odd pairs like this, it keeps one's interest up.
